Strange Story of Samuel F. Whitlow of Iola, Kan., Told to Coroner's Jury.

YOUNG LADY FOUND DYING

RELATIVES BELIEVE MURDER WAS COMMITTED.

* jury that is investigating the tragic death of Miss May Sapp adjourned this afternoon until 16 o'clock tomorrow morning. Coroner D. W. Reid said tonight that he was not at all certain that a verdict would be reached tomorrow.

The principal witness today was Samuel S. Whitlow, the merchant who declared that the girl killed herself on account of an infatuation for him. His story on the witness stand was the same as that told to the

of J. N. Sapp, prominent farmer of Moran, Kan., had committed suicide because of her unrequired love for him. The girl was found dead in the yard of her father's home at Moran on the night of Sept. 27, her throat slashed with a razor that was found close by. Whitlow is 40 years old, and has a wife and three children. He has always borne a good repu-

Whitlow formerly was a school teacher and Miss Sapp was one of his pupils. They had been friends for several years. Whitlow told the officers last night that he and the girl had never been intimate. He declared that the girl had become infatuated with him and had repeatedly urged him to leave his family and run away with her. He said that on the night of the transdy, he must her at the rear of her. the tragedy, he met her at the rear of her father's house and told her that their relations must cease, whereupon she drew a razor across her throat. Attempt at Suicide. Whitlow attempted to commit suicide while being brought to Iola from Moran in a carriage by the sheriff, by drinking wood alcohol. He was revived after the physicians had worked with him for several hours, and placed under arrest.

The members of Miss Sapp's family insist that she did not commit suicide. Whitlow had recovered sufficiently this afternoon to appear before the coroner's

An explanation may be found in the well known fact regarding the general circulation of the atmosphere. Within the overheated zone of the trade winds the elastic and hot surface air ascends continually, especially along the equatorial belt of calms, and as it rises several miles above sea level it not only parts with its watery vapor by condensation, but the remaining dry air in its prolonged ascent must become so intensely rarified that it loses heat by radiation and expansion much faster than it can absorb heat from the sun's We may therefore easily see why the tropical air from rising from low levels to a height of 35,000 feet has its of the cold of interstellar space. On the contrary, within the temperate and polar regions the air has no general ascending motion like that of the tropical atmosphere. In the midle and high latitudes the atmospheric over- a dose of its own medicine. flow from the tropical belt has a general descending motion, and consequently the descending aerial masses are continually warmed mechanically by compression as they sink downward and penetrate the denser atmospheric strata of the lower levels. Observations by polar explorers have shown that on and near the arctic and antarctic circles the prevailing winds blow out from the poles, and are such as to indicate the existence of almost perennially descending air currents over the areas surrounding both the north and
